A Golden City.

The New Mexican has the following:

Under the above caption the Gazette, published in Trier, Germany, gives its impression of the Las Placitas discovery. As an instance of the accuracy of the publications in the old country in regard to American wonders, and the tenderfoot ideas of European editors, the item will be found interesting, and it is therefore translated and reproduced here:

The American newspapers again publish this season the most wonderful discoveries. The latest New York newspapers, which have just arrived inform us that in the neighborhood of Santa Fe, New Mexico, or about thirty miles from that old and well known city, they have discovered a town built out of gold. The new gold discovery is in the town of Las Placitas. The Governor of Santa Fe went to Las Placitas with engineers and assayers and by breaking stones from the streets of the town they estimated a gold value of about $25,000 per ton. Some of the stones have an approximate value of three dollars a pound, and thousands of new emigrants are busy breaking up the houses and melting and shipping the material.

Mr. HOLYOKE, in a recent account of his American experiences, lays stress on the fact that while he could in Chicago get a good cup of coffee, comfortably served, for five cents, he had to pay ten to have his boots brushed. The bootblack charge is almost the last survivor of war prices.

ANOTHER relic of the Spanish Armada has been secured at Slains, in Scotland. It is a large gun raised up out of the place where one of the ships belonging to the Armada which was wrecked, and, though it has been in that place 200 years, it is as good as ever.
